BRINGING UP PATRIOTS

THE U. S. Department of Labor is promoting a movement of a very laudable character, having for its object the instruction of foreigners desiring to become naturalized. The suggestion should receive the cordial endorsement of everybody to the end that citizens in the making should be brought to a realization of the benefits conferred on them by the inestimable boon of citizenship. The Bureau of Naturalization has taken the matter up with the idea of interesting clergymen of all denominations and inducing them to make the question of preparedness for citizenship the subject of their sermons. In view of the approach of the national holiday and the proximity of Sunday the suggestion comes with peculiar timeliness. The gospel of good citizenship should be enunciated in every city and hamlet for the purpose of instilling American ideals and patriotism not alone in the minds of foreign residents but also our millions of native-born. The appeal to the pastors is founded on the realization that the churches can aid materially in inspiring immediate and aggressive action.

In this connection the average American stands in greater need of education than many foreigners, who have to study the principles of government and the history of the foundation of the republic to qualify them for the obligations of electors in the coming election. On the other hand it is a deplorable truth that many boys and girls born in this country are more ignorant of the elements of government than foreigners of mediocre education. The American boy, unfortunately, does not have to submit to a test before he becomes eligible for voting, and the country suffers from this lack of knowledge. Even in the public schools the science of government and the rudiments of citizenship are more conspicuous by their absence than they are by their presence. Fads are heaped upon fads, special teachers of isms and ologies are found in abundance, but in the basic principles of government hardly anything is done in the way of moulding the minds of the grade pupils who are destined to form the pillars of the republic in later years. Instead of taking such an active interest in the education of foreigners the Labor department and the control of the public school system could much better employ time in teaching the rising American youth something about his own country, the fathers who died that the republic might live and the statesmen whose sacrifices adorn the pages of history with illustrious deeds. The foreigner can take care of himself, for it is to his pecuniary interest to learn something about the United States, into which he desires to be incorporated, but the adolescent American who seldom passes beyond the seventh or eighth grade of the public schools is the most vital responsibility entrusted to the governing powers of the present generation. If the average native-born boy knew anything about the law he would have more respect for it and pay more attention to the little courtesies of life instead of hanging around corners, dodging through alleys and taunting the officers of the law with constant infractions that render them amenable to punishment. If there is any instruction in the duties of citizenship let us begin at home by teaching our boys and girls how to value the gift of the franchise and the obligations incurred in selecting candidates for office.

MORE EXCUSES FOR WAITING

THE time will come when the anger of the American people will flame up and explode with a force that will shatter the existence of the men standing behind the dilatory incumbent of the White House. This may convince him and his following that the people will not endure the constant temporizing, dilly-dallying makeshifts by which an avowed hostile country manages to keep its face in the present international complication on the border. The time for letter writing was supposed to have been swallowed up in the fury of the masses when they read of the massacre of the Tenth Cavalry, but this reflex indignation does not appear to have impressed the administration beyond supplying another pretext for beginning a new series of letters. Even Gen. Funston, the intrepid personification of virile Americanism, is impatient. He and his gallant men are chafing at the delays invited by the vacillation of the White House and the wave of enthusiasm that swept over the country last week at the thought that the United States was going to retaliate threatens to die in the bornin'. The American people do not demand war, for they are inclined to peaceful pursuits, but they have been aroused to the point where they will no longer endure the taunts flung across the border by an insolent and cruel foe. If Mexico is to be cleaned up and the way paved for good government the sooner the job is undertaken the better for all concerned, the better it will be for civilization, and the better for commerce. Under the Monroe doctrine the United States assumes the responsibility for the preservation of good order and decency over the Rio Grande, but the executive of this nation appears to be afraid and perfectly willing to shirk the job if the people will only let him wash his hands of the odious affair. The subjection of Carranza when threatened with the guns of a rapidly growing army on the border is merely the submission of the thug and sandbagger when he finds himself cornered by a policeman holding a big gun at his head. The sandbagger does not mean to reform or to retire from the dastardly job of cutting the throats of unoffending citizens, but he is willing to preserve an inoffensive front so long as the policeman holds that gun in a commanding position. So it is with Uncle Sam through his lieutenants at Washington. They are holding at bay an outlaw—the assassin of brave soldiers; but as soon as the guns of the army and navy are withdrawn the same scenes of carnage and rapine will be re-enacted throughout Mexico.

In civil life the policeman takes precautions to see that his prisoner does not get in a position where he can resume his intimidation of honest citizens, for the law which backs the policeman sees that the culprit is placed where cannot do any harm. The United States is big enough for this task of cleaning up Mexico and, since the machinery of Mars has been well oiled, this is the time to go through with the job instead of waiting until the elections approach and furnish another excuse for a feeble protest against the ruthless government of Mexico.

OLDEST TREES IN THE WORLD

FACTS ABOUT THE SEQUOIA ESTABLISH ITS ANTIQUITY AS EXISTING BEFORE ARK

(By Associated Press.)

SAN FRANCISCO, June 30.—The great redwood trees of California are said, in an annual report of the California Redwood Association, to be the oldest living things in the world. Therefore it is surmised that had Noah taken his cruise in the ark in the vicinity of California he could have moored his craft to one of the trees, awaiting the water to subside, both because of its age and enormous height.

The fact that the redwood tree is so ancient has been unearthed by recent scientific researches, which ascertain that "General Sherman," in the Sequoia National park, is approximately ten thousand years old. It might thus have been the tree to serve as the hitching post for the ark.

It is stated that these trees confine their growth to the present littoral of California, but that the older and larger species mark what was once the coast line of the Sierra Nevada mountain range. Those trees began their growth before the record of man began, it is estimated by the scientists.

For a season men are not going to be so blamed anxious about places to sun.—Nashville Tennessean.
